Keyrus Belgium launches International Data Scientist Program with a 6-week boot camp

Keyrus Group to train and recruit 50 top-level data scientists

Brussels, 6 May 2015 – In the continuity of the development of its consulting and R&D activities in Big Data and Data Science, Keyrus Group announces an ambitious Data Scientist Program to fill numerous vacancies.

Despite the hype around data science, recruiting top-level data scientists in today's market remains a challenge. They are few and far between and there are only limited academic programs available. This is why Keyrus, an international player in the field of Data Intelligence, Digital Development and Management Consulting & Transformation, has developed an international boot camp allowing the most skilled young graduates and PhD's to put their knowledge into practice in a professional setting.

Trainees will be taught to use Keyrus' data science approach tailored to solve the most complex business issues with big data and analytics, while benefitting from the support of an international team of experienced professionals and the personal coaching from a senior consultant. In addition to technology, computer science and applied mathematics, the Keyrus data scientists will be trained in the necessary communication, presentation, data storytelling and soft skills to make them comprehensive professionals able to help Keyrus' clients to embrace the new data paradigms.

The targeted candidates are primarily graduates with a master or PhD degree in IT, Mathematics, Statistics, Computer Science, Engineering, Operations Research or related fields. The boot camp is spread over six modules (ranging from the Data Intelligence Foundations to the building of a business case), and is taking place in Brussels and London.
